Dear Mr. Echols:

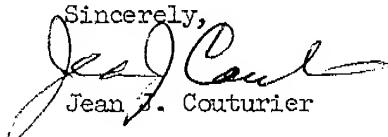

We are happy to enclose a copy of the National Civil Service League's newly expanded GOOD GOVERNMENT for your interest. We are proud that our publication, now in its eighty-first year, is the senior journal in the field and one of the longest-running continuous publications in America. Your comments and suggestions on this issue, on how we can further improve GOOD GOVERNMENT and on possible articles would be appreciated.

This issue is built around the winners of the League's 1964 Career Service Awards, who were honored by President Johnson and other leaders in our society last April. It was prepared as a League public-service document to further enhance the prestige of government careers. We have mailed information on the issue to over 35,000 school officials, librarians, public administrators, periodical and press editors, and others who should be interested. We are receiving truly amazing responses--within a week after publication we had received requests for over 2000 copies.

Our September issue, we believe, will be a "blockbuster" that will stimulate even more interest. It will include an article by League Board member J. Edward Day entitled "Erosions of Civil Service" which deals with political fund-raising pressures and other practices he calls "threatened encroachments on the integrity of civil service." Marion B. Folsom's "Improving Executive Management in the Federal Government", discusses the recent CED report of that title on which eight members of the League's Board worked. A hard-hitting statement by James E. Webb, "Manpower Crisis in the Public Service - A Challenge to Urban America", is must reading for citizens concerned with Metropolitan Government. There are other articles we think you and those you know will find interesting.

The December issue of GOOD GOVERNMENT will contain an article written by Supreme Court Justice Tom C. Clark on personnel management in the judiciary, a contribution by Dr. O. Glenn Stahl further discussing the CED report, and other articles on the vital issues facing the public service today.

Again, the League would warmly welcome your comments. We would also appreciate your valuable help in bringing the League's expanded Good Government to the attention of as many people as you can, both for their readership interest and for their joining us in our work to help enhance the efficiency, quality and economy in the public service.

Sincerely,

Jean J. Couturier
